500	This is the seventh edition of this book, illustrated by Vladimir Lebedev. Vladimir Konashevich illustrated the previous six editions (1930-1934).
520	This humorous poem tells the story of a very absent-minded man who does everything backwards. After a series of ridiculous incidents, he falls asleep in an unattached train car at the train station. Not realizing he isn't traveling anywhere, he is astonished in the end to realize he is still in Leningrad: he thinks the train traveled "backwards". Marshak later indicated that the character in this book was inspired by the scholar Professor Ivan Alekseevich Kablukov (1857-1942).

- 500 "Lebedev focuses on the main character, which he draws as a Charlie Chaplin-like fellow. His choice of material is clear from the visible sketchy strokes of the pencil, over the line drawing of the figure"--Lemmens & Stommels, Russian artists and the children's book, page 353.
- 500 Bound with staples in self-wraps. Front cover shows a man holding an umbrella with a bird on his shoulder. Printing and detailed publication information on back cover.
