500	When Gorky founded "Parus" (The Sail) his progressive publishing house in St. Petersburg on the eve of the Russian Revolution, he was committed to starting a line of revolutionary children's books and got Benois and Chukovsky to compile this anthology from many of the most brilliant authors and artists of the day. Elka is the very first children's book to be published under the Bolsheviks. It was intended to be an annual, but it never went beyond this one volume. Although its appearance was announced for Spring 1917, to coincide with Easter, the Revolution delayed publication and the title of the annual had to be changed from Raduga ("Rainbow" to Elka (Fir Tree) for the Christmas season. It did not finally appear until February 1918.

- 520 An anthology of stories, poems, pictures, and puzzles for children, entitled "The Christmas tree." The collection unites pre-revolutionary sensibilities with the revolutionary avant-garde, including a diverse group of illustrators and authors
- 500 The text and illustrations of the books exemplify the transition from the lush decorate phase of the pre-revolutionary Silver Age to the modernism of the early Soviet regime. Mir Iskusstva (World of Art) artists like Benois, Chekhonin, Dobuzhinskii and Mitrokhin share space with avant-garde designers Annenkov, Lebedev and Puni. Although his wife is credited with the authorship of "Ierniya-lentyai", Puni actually wrote the story which he illustrates here
- 500 Bound with staples into illustrated paper over boards. Includes one reproduction of a watercolor illustration by Repin pasted in. Cover illustration is by Vladimir Lebedev, and depicts Santa Claus with some animals around a Christmas tree. The title page and series title page are by Sergei Chekhonin and Vladimir Lebedev. Frontispiece is an illustration of a Christmas tree by Alexandre Benois.
